Unmistakable face's late breakthrough

Picture: AP

M. Emmet Walsh
Actor
Born: New York, 1935
Died: Vermont, aged 88

M. Emmet Walsh was the character actor who brought his unmistakable face and unsettling presence to films including Blood Simple and Blade Runner.

Walsh died from cardiac arrest on March 19 at a hospital in St Albans, Vermont, his long-time manager Sandy Joseph said.

The ham-faced, heavy-set Walsh often played good old boys with bad intentions, as he did in one of his rare leading roles as a crooked Texas private detective in the Coen brothers' first film, the 1984 neo-noir Blood Simple.

Joel and Ethan Coen said they wrote the part for Walsh, who would win the first Film Independent Spirit Award for best male lead for the role.

Critics and film geeks relished the moments when he showed up on screen.

Roger Ebert once observed that "no movie featuring either Harry Dean Stanton or M. Emmet Walsh in a supporting role can be altogether bad".

Walsh played a crazed sniper in the 1979 Steve Martin comedy The Jerk and a prostate-examining doctor in the 1985 Chevy Chase vehicle Fletch.

In 1982's gritty Blade Runner, a film he said was gruelling and difficult to make with perfectionist director Ridley Scott, Walsh plays a hard-nosed police captain who pulls Harrison Ford from retirement to hunt down cyborgs.

Born Michael Emmet Walsh, his characters led people to believe he was from the American South, but he could hardly have been from any further north.

Walsh was raised on Lake Champlain in Swanton, Vermont, just a few miles from the US-Canadian border, where his grandfather, father and brother worked as customs officers.

He went to a tiny local high school with a graduating class of 13, then to Clarkson University in Potsdam, New York, and the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York City.

He acted exclusively on the stage, with no intention of doing otherwise, for a decade, working in summer stock and repertory companies.

Walsh slowly started making film appearances in 1969 with a bit role in Alice's Restaurant and did not start playing prominent roles until nearly a decade after that when he was in his 40s, getting his breakthrough with 1978's Straight Time, in which he played Dustin Hoffman's smug, boorish parole officer.

Walsh was shooting Silkwood with Meryl Streep in Dallas in the autumn of 1982 when he got the offer for Blood Simple from the Coen brothers, then-aspiring filmmakers who had seen and loved him in Straight Time.

"My agent called with a script written by some kids for a low-budget movie," Walsh told The Guardian in 2017. "It was a Sydney Greenstreet kind of role, with a Panama suit and the hat.

"I thought it was kinda fun and interesting. They were 100 miles away in Austin, so I went down there early one day before shooting."

Walsh said the filmmakers didn't even have enough money left to fly him to New York for the opening but he would be stunned that first-time filmmakers had produced something so good.

"I saw it three or four days later when it opened in LA and I was, like: Wow!" he said.

"Suddenly my price went up five times. I was the guy everybody wanted."

In the film he plays Loren Visser, a detective asked to trail a man's wife, who then is paid to kill her and her lover.

Visser also acts as narrator and the opening monologue, delivered in a Texas drawl, included some of Walsh's most memorable lines.

"Now, in Russia they got it mapped out so that everyone pulls for everyone else. That's the theory, anyway," Visser says.

"But what I know about is Texas. And down here, you're on your own."

He was still working into his late 80s, making recent appearances on the TV series The Righteous Gemstones and American Gigolo.

And his more than 100 film credits included director Rian Johnson's 2019 family murder mystery Knives Out and director Mario Van Peebles' western Outlaw Posse, released this year.

Johnson was among those paying tribute to Walsh on social media.

"Emmet came to set with 2 things: a copy of his credits, which was a small-type single-spaced double-column list of modern classics that filled a whole page, & two-dollar bills which he passed out to the entire crew," Johnson tweeted. "'Don't spend it and you'll never be broke.' Absolute legend." AP
